OVERVIEW

The increased COVID-19 awareness from the Government, the public and private sector has noted significant achievements towards the fight against this pandemic in the Country. In this week under reference, the Government did set aside a special isolation and treatment facility for healthcare workers as the Country adopted the mantra of test-isolate-treat and trace in the fight against coronavirus. It also cautioned individuals defying the set directives in the fight against coronavirus and unscrupulous persons selling recycled face masks to unsuspecting Kenyans.

Other than the above, there was a slight decline in the general crime trend but increased cases of gender-based violence across the Country. Our security sources take note of two spouse murders reported in Embu and Homa Bay Counties.

SECURITY THREATS

There continued to be security challenges brought about the enforcement of the daily curfew across the Country among them business invasions and civil disobedience.

CRIME

Unlike the previous weeks, this reporting period recorded a slight decline in the general crime trend. We can attribute this decline to the fact that security agencies across the Country are on high alert, with instructions to be on the lookout for suspicious characters. Despite this notable decline, traders in some parts of the Country have ran into losses after their shops were broken into during the curfew hours.

CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE

Our security sources have noted increased cases of individual disobedience to the set directives against COVID-19 since the declaration of the curfew hours in the Country. In this reporting week, police officers were able to arrest at least 500 persons who defied the social gathering directives following raids at residential premises, social joints, and religious centres.
