SECURITY THREATS

The dusk to dawn curfew being enforced across the Country and continuous heavy downpours has seen an upsurge of gang-related activities and gender-based violence.

CRIME

There have been reports of criminals disguising as rapid response team tracking down COVID-19 patients' contacts in the night. In some instances, they have managed to trick security guards manning residential premises and ended up robbing unsuspecting tenants of their valuables.

Gender-based violence has reportedly been on the rise in most cases resulting in severe instances of death. Statistics show that every week there are at least five cases of gender-related violence reported across the Country.

CIVIL UNREST

The containment order in Eastleigh and Old Town may see similar measures extended to other parts of the Country should the number of COVID-19 infections keep rising. There exist uncertainty on how the public may react should the Government decide to increase the containment period in the two areas or contain other areas in the Country.
